Executive Summary

Whooping Crane Captive Management Plan for 2007

As of January 2007, the world's captive population of Whooping Cranes (Grus americana) consists of 145 animals (73 males, 72 females) at seven institutions. Demographic analyses of the current captive breeding population show that this population has the potential to grow at a rapid rate (26% in 2006). With such a high potential growth rate, we have the ability to maintain release projects while maintaining a positive growth rate in the captive flock. The current genetic analysis indicates that it is possible to maintain more than 90% of the gene diversity of the original founders for greater than 100 years. These analyses indicate that proper management has ensured that this population is in good genetic health for future generations.

Management Goals:

During the Master Plan workshop held in 2002, the captive management team set a goal of retaining 90.0% gene diversity for 100 years. It was shown that a target population of 153 birds will be needed to attain this goal. With limited availability of genetically valuable offspring, the team recommended building the population slowly to allow maturation of additional pairings whose offspring are needed in the composition of the future population. However, due to greater than anticipated retention of genetically valuable birds, we have met the target population needed for the retention of 90.0% gene diversity for 100 years, which is now 135 birds.

Summary Actions:

The 2007 reproductive plan requires the retention of offspring from genetically valuable pairings. However, retention, transfer and re-pairing recommendations will have to be finalized during the Recovery Team meeting (February 1-2, 2007) after group discussions.

Description of Population Status

Introduction

The Whooping Crane (Grus americana) captive breeding program was initiated in 1967 at Patuxent Wildlife Research Center (Laurel, Maryland) with eggs and wild caught birds taken from Wood Buffalo National Park (WBNP) in Northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories of Canada (Lewis 1995). Subsequent egg collections to increase the captive flock continued until 1998. To guard against catastrophic loss at one institution, the captive flock was split among additional breeding facilities. In addition to Patuxent, birds were sent to the International Crane Foundation (Baraboo, Wisconsin), San Antonio Zoo (San Antonio, Texas), Calgary Zoo (Calgary, Alberta), and the Audubon Center for Research of Endangered Species (ACRES)/Audubon Zoo (New Orleans, Louisiana). Subsequent to flock subdivision, Lowry Park Zoo (Tampa, Florida) and Homosassa Springs State Wildlife Park (Homosassa Springs, Florida) were added as a holding and display facilities. As of January 2007, the world's captive population of Whooping Cranes consists of 145 animals (73 males, 72 females; Figs. 1 & 2) at the seven institutions.

Demography

The current captive breeding population has the potential to grow at a rapid rate (26% in 2006), however a sustained growth rate such as this would quickly surpass the carrying capacity of the holding facilities. The high recruitment rate of this population (Table 1) allows the possibility to maintain release projects while maintaining a positive growth rate in the captive flock.

Genetics

Since the inception of the captive program, there have been many eggs brought into captivity from WBNP. This sub-sampling of the wild population has provided 65 founders for the captive population. Of these birds, two founders are currently alive and have not bred. Table 2 illustrates the current genetic parameters of the population and indicates a benefit to the captive population if these unrepresented founders were to reproduce. The current analysis indicates that it is possible to maintain greater than 90% of the gene diversity of the original founders for greater than 100 years. The high retention of gene diversity is in part due to proper management, and ensures that this population is in good genetic health for future generations.

Assumptions of the Demographic Analysis

For the demographic analyses, it was noted that there was a significant change in population dynamics starting around 1980 (Fig. 1). At this point in time various management strategies changed, with artificial insemination and additional egg collections from Wood Buffalo giving a boost to captive productivity. As the dynamics of the pre-1980 population are less like that of the current population, we agreed that the demographic analyses should not include data pre-1980.

Assumptions of the Genetic Analysis (see Jones et al. 2002)

The historical founder ancestry has been revised to include all information known about the ancestry of the birds brought into captivity from Wood Buffalo National Park. A set of unique parents corresponding to each nest site were used to assign parentage to all eggs and wild caught individuals brought into captivity. Birds imported from the same nest site were given the same set of parents to designate their common ancestry. A pedigree was created from this information to aid in the management of the captive population. We assume that this pedigree provides the best information to date on the known ancestry of the captive population.

In addition to the analysis using the historical pedigree, we also produced analyses that use founder inter-relatednesses from molecular DNA analyses. By using pedigrees initiated with molecular estimates of relatedness between founders, matings based on these analyses will assure the survival of molecular genetic diversity. The major assumption with this analysis is that the molecular data used provides an acceptable estimate of founder inter-relatedness. However as we have little evidence on the accuracy of molecular estimates of relatedness, we have calculated two different estimators of founder relatedness (Blouin et al. 1996 and Queller and Goodnight 1989) and are currently using both estimators in parallel studbook analyses.

The genetic analysis from the historical studbook (WC-LEG; e.g., Appendix C) was used as the primary genetic analysis for this meeting. We then consulted the two genetic analyses which use molecular based relatedness between founders (WC-AS and WC-QNG, e.g., Appendices D and E), as a secondary criterion to choose the genetic quality of individuals and pairings. By providing matings that are genetically suitable in the historical and molecular studbooks, we assume that these matings will provide the best pairings which include the most up to date information available. This strategy of using both historical and molecular data provides the opportunity to maintain AZA standards of genetic management while assuring the conservation of molecular genetic diversity.

Management Goals:

During the Master Plan workshop held in 2002, the captive management team set a goal of retaining 90.0% gene diversity for 100 years. It was shown that a target population of 153 birds will be needed to attain this goal. This value is in line with the current Recovery Team goals of producing a captive population consisting of 45 breeder pairs. With limited availability of genetically valuable offspring, the team recommended building the population slowly to allow maturation of additional pairings whose offspring are need in the composition of the future population. Accounting for attrition and non-hatch year mortalities this will require retaining four hatchlings in 2003 and one additional bird every year there after (Figure 3). With this acceleration in recruitment, the target population could be met by 2016, the target date set by the Recovery Team. Although a growth rate greater than this is easily attainable, the true limiting factor for the growth of the captive population will be the availability of genetically suitable birds to retain. Unfortunately the retention of genetically over-represented birds for the purpose of boosting demographic retention would only serve to reduce genetic retention and accelerate the decline in gene diversity. Thus our goal of slow growth is the most optimum strategy for overall health of the captive population.

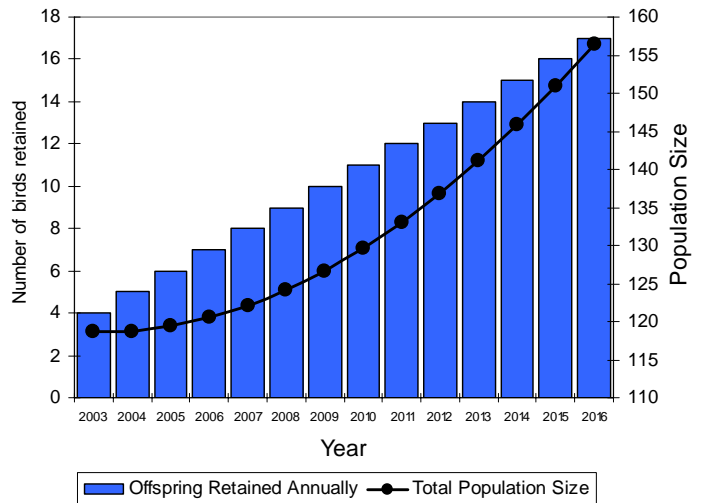

Figure 3. To obtain slow expansion of the captive population, hatchling retention is slated to start at 4 birds and increase 1 bird each year there after until the target is reached.

In 2006, we retained a total of thirteen hatchlings for the captive flock: twelve to become future breeders, and two non-releasable chicks. Due to the accelerated retention since 2003, the population is now at 145 birds, currently eight years ahead of the original schedule. From the targeted retention of genetically valuable offspring, a re-calculation of the number of birds needed to maintain 90.0% gene diversity for 100 years shows that we have exceeded our goal, with only 135 birds now needed for the maintenance of gene diversity.

Management Priorities (from the 2002 Master Plan workshop):

1. Given that many of the genetically valuable birds currently in the population are not breeding, the captive management team deemed it a priority to promote breeding in birds that are genetically valuable and of breeding age. Artificial insemination should be used where possible to aid in reproduction of these valuable birds. In addition, semen from genetically valuable males should be collected and stored in case it would be needed in the future.
2. It was also noted in the meeting that any captive offspring produced should be delegated in the following hierarchical manor:
 - a. Offspring of genetically valuable pairings should be retained in captivity as future breeders (as noted above).
 - b. Offspring of genetically over represented pairings should be placed in the release program.
 - c. For the over represented offspring from disposition 2.b. who are retained in the captive population due to logistic or health problems, four alternatives to breeding should be considered.

These birds could be made available for imprint models, foster parents, display birds, and/or research birds.

3. The management team agreed that additional molecular genetic research is needed to provide more accurate measures of inter-founder relatednesses. To this end, a study is currently slated to address the accuracy issues when empirically estimating relatedness, where the results of the study will be used to improve on the methodologies set by Jones et al. (2002).

At the meeting, it was also deemed important to attempt incorporation of molecular data from MHC studies (Sue Jarvi, unpublished data). The team saw the usefulness of using genotypes from the MHC locus to guide mating decisions when presented with two equally acceptable pairings. For example, when two equally acceptable matings are found (i.e., the choice of using semen collected from two male siblings to inseminate a particular female), preference could be given to the pairings that would promote MHC allelic diversity in future offspring.

Summary Actions:

1. Retain offspring in hatch year 2007 from genetically valuable pairings.
2. Transfer the remainder of the offspring to the current reintroduction program.
3. Transfer and re-pairing recommendations will be finalized during the Recovery Team meeting (February 1-2, 2007) after group discussions.

Appendix A: Studbook export filters and glossary of terms

Studbook export filters

Studbook information:

Data exported on: 21 Jan 2007 from Sparks v1.54
Data compiled by: Ken Jones
Contact info: International Crane Foundation
Data current thru: 21 Jan 2007
Scope of data: Global captive and release pops

Demographic data from:

C:\sparks\wc-leg\mwc-leg.prn
C:\sparks\wc-leg\fwc-leg.prn

Demographic filter conditions:

Dates: 01/01/1980 <= date User Defined Fields: "C" $ upper(WILD)

Genetic data from: C:\sparks\wc-leg\wc-leg.ped

Genetic filter conditions:
User Defined Fields: "C" $ upper(WILD)
Status: Living on 21 Jan 2007

Date used for calculations:

1/21/2007

Animals excluded from mating population:

Behavioural or sexual dysfunction
1137 F

Over-represented in all populations
1053 F
1033 M
1035 F
1036 F

Over-represented in migratory population only
1144 M
1127 M possible exclusion in 2008
1154 F possible exclusion in 2008
